12/21 BUCK CREEK DAY SKI

Buck Creek is one of those places that we just can't get to with the ski bus so it has to be a pre or post season trip with a smaller group that we travel with, to reach this destination. From the base of the creek where it pours into the White River in a beautiful little canyon there is an access trail to the Ranger Creek emergency airfield. This airfield is a nice flat wide open place to warm up and get some beautiful views of the rim of the valley. Also at the end of the runway is a mile long loop road to extend your leisurely tour day. For those interested in a little more elevation gain than the 0' gain the airfield offers, the Buck Creek road is perfect. Often when we have done this trip late in the ski season there are numerous trees that have been blown down across the road, but this early in the year we should not encounter much of this. The high end of the road reaches 4,400' for an 1,800' gain in about five miles, and for the real adventurer the route can be extended from the end of the road up the Sun Top Mountain hiking trail another several miles. From this ski route you can see across the valley to Noble Knob, Little Ranger Peak, the cathedral like parapets of Castle Mountain, and the Corral Pass area. The road takes us over a couple of creeks and then starts ascending Fawn Ridge. A few years ago a couple of us used this road as access to a multi-day high route ski traverse of this ridge-line as it lead south to Sunrise. This is (yes intentionally) set up as a Thursday mid week trip as a break from the Christmas season before the hectic holiday comes. Come escape the shopping malls and join us for a relaxing day in the solitude of the mountains. Provided: transit, maps. Date Thur.12/21 Cost $46
