10/18-27 PATAGONIA AND EASTER ISLAND SOUTH AMERICA

Easter Island is famous for its nearly 1,000 Moai stone carvings guarding its coastline, and for being one of the most remote inhabited islands in the world. The nearest continental country is Chile, some 2,182 miles away. It is still somewhat mysterious how the island was settled back in around 1200 AD, some think it was earlier than this. The decline and fall of this sophisticated culture most now believe was primarily due to the complete deforestation of the island about 990 years ago. We will visit the island and experience the native culture which is now reestablished under the protection of Chilean Government. Patagonia is a whole other story, at the southern tip of South America this region encompasses parts of Chile and Argentina and is one of the few areas that touches three separate oceans the Atlantic, Pacific, and the Southern Ocean. It is the usual port of call for ships heading out for the Antarctic ice. This southern end of Chile is largely national park and refuges, and contains some of the most recognized summits in climbing magazines including Mt. Fitz Roy 11,000' high, rising almost vertical from near sea level. This dramatic country with its high altitude plateaus, has wonderful hiking and provides dramatic mountain backdrops like no place else on our earth.
