4/4-4/10 PRINCE WILLIAM SOUND BY BOAT

Why go all the way to Alaska to tele or tour ski? To show that "cross country" and can still be part of cross country/back country AT skiing. It seems these days the term "cross country" is missing from many skier's experience. Skiers get a very narrow view of what skiing can be and what the world has to offer when they never leave the same old groomed trail in their back yard, or when they spend year after year doing the same ski events. I like the Alaskan tourism license plate slogan: "See Alaska B4UDIE". So I say to fellow tour skiers: "Ski Alaska B4UDIE" This is a true back country trip for those who really want to get out into the remote mountains and ski runs that maybe no one has ever skied before. We will be flying to Anchorage to spend a couple days warming up at the Alyeska Ski Resort before heading to Whittier, the port of call for our charter boat. There we will spend 3 days climbing and skiing some of the most remote mountains you will likely ever see, sleeping and dining on the boat. This area has just about any kind of terrain imaginable for skiing, from gentle, rolling meadows for the skinny skier to technical ski mountaineering. The average total snowfall in western Prince William Sound for the last 50 years is 247.1 inches, measured at sea level! The mountains, islands, coves, and fjords that make up the Sound make for some of the most spectacular terrain found anywhere in the world. No lifts, no helicopters just some incredible skiing. We will also be stopping in at College Fjord (like Glacier Bay without cruise ships) to see a calving glacier that still exists there. Provided: airfare, lodging, transfers, ship fare & meals onboard. Dates 4/4-4/10 Cost $3,877
