9/6-10 SUN VALLEY SUMMER HIKING

Sun Valley bustles with travelers during the winter ski season. It was one of the first Alpine ski resorts in existence in the United States, built just before WW II, and it's still one of the trend setters in ski resort standards. The valley also is home to half a dozen good Nordic Ski track networks. During the summer however the area quiets down with the local residents outnumbering the vacationers. The valley is beautiful this time of year and by mid September the hills will frequently be starting to show their fall palette of colors, at these lofty altitudes in the Rocky mountains. The town's restaurants and shops are the same high quality and healthy dining found during the winter season they are just less crowded and less expensive, and the hiking is beyond compare. North of town are the Sawtooth mountains and west are the open forested Smoky Mountains. Galena Summit between Sun Valley and Stanley provides some of the highest altitude trailheads in the area. The hiking trails here are extensive with dozens of options ranging in difficulty and length. Vegetation is different than most of us coast range residents are used to. There is little underbrush to push your way through on older trails, and many of the trees are grand ponderosa pine trees with their characteristic red bark. Our trip will take us to lodging in town from which we can take day hikes out into the forests, or wander town on a day off. If you have never been to the valley and are not a downhill skier this is a great time of year to go! Provided: transit, rental cars, airfare, lodging. Dates 9/6-10 Cost $1162
