12/2 TEANAWAY BUTTE

We did our fall colors hike in the Teanaway valley this year and it reminded me of how much I like this little valley. The colors this year were fabulous, even better than the renowned Shenandoah National Park area. This is probably because West Virginia has had an extremely wet summer and fall this year (sort of the reverse of normal). This fall hiking trip drew my focus back to the area to try and find some new destinations here. Often it is quiet and uncrowded here during the winter months, and frequently it provides shelter from heavy winter storms hitting the west side of the Cascades. Some of us have skied up the east flank of Teanaway Butte from the Jungle and Rye Creek valleys but never up the southern ridge. This route offers what looks to be some nice views of the Teanaway valley on the way up the ridge toward the summit. There is also an opportunity for a ski loop if the snow conditions are right or a ski up the West Fork Teanaway river valley. This is the sunny side of the Cascades of course, so bring your sunscreen and camera gear, but it is the cascades so don't forget the storm-gear and your "Seattle Sombrero" :-)
