3/29-4/10 THE NORWEGIAN ARCTIC LYNGEN ALPS & FJORDS ALPINE TOURING

Norway and the Norwegian Arctic are remarkable not only because of their skiing but also their history and culture. We will be skiing mostly in the north but will also spend several days in Oslo the capitol city to visit the dozens of museums and galleries of this home of the Norseman. Last time I was here some of the highlights were the Kon-Tiki Museum, the outdoor museum, the Viking Ship and Norwegian Forest museums. But enough about the culture. Tromso is right under the Aurora ring of fire so we will have to stay up late on a clear night and look for the Northern Lights. In March you hit the best time of the skiing season here in the far north of Norway, since we will actually have some real daylight hours, and don't worry about traveling with your ski bag; everyone else traveling will have one too. If you are still not convinced that Norway is the center of the tour skiing universe they actually have a national cell phone app to track the trail grooming with real time GPS tracking of the grooming machine locations. Our eventual destination is isolated from any overland transportation during the winter, the only way in or out is by airplane or ice breaker ship. It is easy to get around town though and most people here speak some English, but as in all of Norway, goods and services can be expensive. Our objective here is to ski the Lyngen Alps, which follow the western shore of the Lyngen Fjord and the range is about 90km in length. The summits dominate the peninsula and are the most dramatic range in Norway. These mountains are just now being discovered by backcountry extreme skiers. The magic of this area is the access from the fjord and the ability to ski from summit to sea-level. With the trade currents here the fjords stay mostly ice free so you can actually sail to your next ski destination by boat, and eat and sleep on shipboard. Provided: transfers, airfare, lodging, most meals. Dates 3/29-4/10 Base Cost $3,675 by land, (+$2,150 sailboat based)
